In this article, we will take a journey through these tumultuous times, exploring the major events that shaped medieval Europe. We will begin with the Black Death, which killed an estimated one-third of the European population and had a profound impact on society and culture.

The Black Death

The Black Death was a bubonic plague that swept through Europe in the mid-14th century. It is estimated to have killed between 30 and 60% of the European population, making it one of the deadliest pandemics in history.

The plague was spread by fleas that lived on black rats. The fleas would bite a rat and then a human, transmitting the plague bacteria. The bacteria would then cause the victim to develop buboes, or swollen lymph nodes. These buboes were often accompanied by fever, chills, and vomiting. In most cases, the victim would die within a few days.

The Black Death had a devastating impact on Europe. It caused widespread death and suffering, and it disrupted trade and commerce. The plague also led to a decline in population, which in turn led to a decline in economic activity. In many parts of Europe, the population did not recover to its pre-plague levels for centuries.
