Paxton traces the rise of fascism in several European countries, including Italy, Germany, and Spain. He shows how fascist leaders such as Benito Mussolini, Adolf Hitler, and Francisco Franco exploited popular fears and grievances to gain power. They used propaganda and violence to silence their opponents and to create a climate of fear and intimidation. Once in power, fascist regimes established authoritarian states that suppressed dissent and violated human rights.

The culmination of Paxton's analysis is World War II, which he argues was the direct result of the fascist regimes' aggressive expansionism. Hitler's invasion of Poland in 1939 set off a chain of events that led to the outbreak of war. The war was a brutal conflict that resulted in the deaths of millions of people. The Holocaust, the systematic extermination of European Jews by the Nazis, was the most horrific crime of the war.
